Poll: The City of Kerrville wants to know your vision for a sustainable water future

Kerrville, Texas (April 28, 2025) – The City of Kerrville is inviting residents to take a brief, six-question survey to help guide community conversations around the Hill Country’s most vital resource – water.

“This is a great opportunity to contribute to the on-going conversation and about the sustainable water future we all want for Kerrville and the Hill Country,” said Mayor Joe Herring, Jr. “Kerrville is listening, and it only takes a few minutes to complete the survey and make your voice heard.”

Many participants in the Kerrville 2050 Comprehensive Plan process indicated that sustainably meeting future water demands was among their top priorities. One of the plan’s guiding principles points to expanding ongoing education efforts regarding water issues.

“Our conversations about water are only going to become more important in the years to come,” Herring said. “This is just one way the City of Kerrville is seeking to maximize the value of those conversations by understanding our shared priorities, attitudes, and understandings.”

The city will roll out the survey on several platforms between now and May 9. To take the survey now, you can visit <https://www.surveymonkey.com/r/W6YDCP7>.

Help Shape the Future of Water in Kerrville

For all of us in the Hill Country, water is a top priority. Because water is a shared resource that doesn't stop at the city limits or the county line, we're working to get a broad understanding of what a more sustainable water future might look like. The City of Kerrville wants to hear from you on your priorities and concerns about water resources in the Hill Country.
